FIELD RESEARCH

2025-present. Climate Change, Chronic Disease and What It Means to Eat Well in Postcolonial Tanzania. What does it mean to “eat well” in a time of rising rates of chronic disease, climate change, expanding social inequality, and intensification of property regimes that support the enclosure of land and plant life? This collaborative engaged research project advances theoretical and methodological approaches to eating well through the development, implementation and evaluation of an innovative program to address the social-ecological basis of health in Maji ya Chai, Tanzania. This initiative Tiba Lishe—literally, treatments that feed—builds on the work of TRMEGA (Training, Research, Monitoring and Evaluation on Gender and AIDS) a non-governmental organization that addresses health through the extension of gardens and a reattachment to plants and soils. Eating well, TRMEGA teaches, is a mode of dwelling in ways that nourish bodies and communities, that strengthen ecologies and economies, and that foster patterns of regeneration. This project develops, systematizes and tests the impact of this approach. Through lessons on diet and small-scale organic growing, as well as the sharing of seeds and seedlings, Tiba Lishe strives to increase participants’ knowledge of healthy eating and increase their capacity to cultivate healthier foods. The intervention is designed to address the forms of dispossession and social ecological abandonment that shape chronic disease in peri-urban areas and therefore locates effectiveness not only in increased knowledge, but also the formation of communities of ongoing support and the transformation of foodscape.

2019-present. The Uzima Project: Reimagining Medicine Against Climate Change: Designs for Land-Based Learning, Research and Healing. A collaborative project between American and African scholars, medical professionals and artists in Kilimanjaro, Tanzania. This research, design initiative invites a collective re-imagining of what constitutes healing amid the 21st century’s health and environmental crises. Globally, medical schools respond to climate change through curricula to train “climate aware” physicians, research to tracks alterations in the distribution and longevity of disease, and plans for responding to emergencies caused by climate events. These initiatives—while important steps—stop short of fully reckoning with medicines entanglements with histories of colonial dispossession and the logics of ongoing extractions that drive climate change. Inspired by Leanne Simpson’s insistence that decolonization requires approaching “land as pedagogy,” this collaborative international project strives to conceive a (anticolonial) teaching, research, and healing garden to join the clinic, classroom, and laboratory as a central site of medical training. Currently, three trajectories of research projects animate this project

- Design research, site as relations 2023-2025.
- Anticolonial/Decolonial plant collections 2023-2025.
- Land-based Nutritional Healing 2025-present.

July 2023-present. Plant Stories: Social-Ecological Basis of Health. This research approaches indigenous notions of health and healing in Tanzania through the kihamba, a mode of planting and dwelling distinctive to Mt Kilimanjaro and Mt Meru. I am collecting histories of kihamba over generations through the storying of plants there. In 2023 my focus has been on the isale plant, that holds the center of kihamba liveliness, links the living with ancestors buried in the kihamba, and marks the border relations of the kihamba. I also started recording plants that were introduced or attended to more intentionally in kihamba during COVID. This is beginning to open up a different picture the impact of the global pandemic in Tanzania than is available through politically contentious and opaque reporting.

Jan 2012, Jan-Jun 2013, Jan-Jul 2014, Feb, Apr-Jun 2015, May-Jun 2016, Jul 2017. Science, Capital and African Healing. Examination of the complex intersection of traditional medicine, clinical practice, scientific research and intellectual property law in Africa. Extended fieldwork on the emerging herbals industry in Tanzania, which involved participant-observation in a range of herbals clinics and production facilities as well as interviews and work with governmental and non-governmental organization fostering the development of herbals such as the Tanzanian National Institute of Medical Research. Investigation into both national and international networks catalyzing the development of regulations and policies shaping the commercialization of herbals.

Jan-Jun 2013, May 2014, May-Jun 2016. Skin. Research albinism and traditional medicine in Tanzania. Ethnographic fieldwork investigates traditional medicines addressing skin diseases through interviews and participant observation with healers and patients as well as interviews with doctors and patients and observations of clinical encounters in the Regional Dermatology Training Center (RDTC) at the Kilimanjaro Christian Medical College. Participant-observation during Albino Outreach Clinic and interviews with clients also conducted. Review of clinical files. Planning discussions underway for an evaluation of the Albino Program.

Jan-Jul 2008. Global Tradition, Tanzanian Medicine. A preliminary exploration of the production and circulation of medicines and medical knowledge central to the making of a global traditional medicine, through a case study in Tanzania. Ethnography of the sciences critical to the development of materia medica in Tanzania, and investigation of the questions and challenges this laboratory work sparks.

May-Jun 2005 and November 2007. Conjuring a Global Traditional Medicine. Archival research in the World Health Organization (Geneva, Switzerland) on the history of WHO's concern with traditional medicine, particularly the development of WHO's Traditional Medicine Unit and the evolution of WHO's work with Traditional Birth Attendants.

May-Jul 2004. Making Tanzanian Traditional Medicine. Research concerning recent initiatives to institutionalize Traditional Medicine in Tanzania, including legislation, changes in Ministry of Health, and a new research center in the National Institutes of Medical Research.

Mar-Jul 2003. Differences in Tanzanian Biomedicine. In-depth interviews with nurses and nurses' aides in southeastern Tanzania concerning their personal experiences with Traditional Medicine and the (illicit) use of Traditional Medicine in the hospital. Observation of outreach to and HIV training for traditional healers.

Jun 2002. History of Biomedicine's Expansion in Southeastern Tanzania. Archival work in the East Africana Library at the University of Dar es Salaam on the history of biomedicine in southeastern Tanzania.

Sep 1998-Sep 1999 and Feb-Jun 2000. Dissertation Fieldwork. Ethnography of healing in the Newala District of the Mtwara Province in southeastern Tanzania.

Jul-Aug 1997. Pre-dissertation Fieldwork. Investigation into the routine practices of Maternal and Child Health and family planning clinics in central and southern Tanzania.

BUILDING INTERNATIONAL LINKAGES

June 2019-present. Land-Based Pedagogy in/for Medicine.

The Memorandum of Agreement with Kilimanjaro supports a range of initiatives to explore land-based pedagogies for medical students and practitioners.

May 2010-Jul 2017. Cornell Global Health Program in Moshi, Tanzania.

In 2010, served as lead professor for global health program. Taught the intensive one-month Cornell University-Kilimanjaro Christian Medical College (KCMC) summer course on global health issues in Tanzania. Facilitated one-month internships for Cornell students. Led two-month reflective course on cross-cultural learning and living. Since then I advised the program, served as lead faculty maintaining relations with KCMC administrators, mentored other instructors and teaching assistants, participated in the preparation seminar and in-country orientation as well as lectured in the course.

Jun 2004 and May 2006. UF Programs with University of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

Coordination of the UF-UDSM Gender and Development Faculty Exchange Program. Assisted in establishing a more extensive orientation for the UF study abroad program.

May-Jun 2002. Gender and Development.

Development of institutional relations between the Center for Women's Studies at UF and two East African universities--Makerere University in Uganda and the University of Dar es Salaam in Tanzania. From this, I designed the Gender and Development Faculty Exchange Program
